Thereupon young Bayard went to West Virginia and taught school at Sugg's Fort in that State, where he met Miss Deakins, who is the daughter of an honest farmer. Senator Davis of West Virginia befriended young Bayard, but wishing to prevent a marriage that would be distasteful to his father, he, Senator Gorman and others used their influence to get the young man appointed Secretary of Arizona. The publication of the engagement at this time is regarded as an indication that young Bayard will not go West unless he can take Miss Deakins with him as his wife. on Very Small Wages.

"A man can live cheap nowadays," said a well-known business man to a Boston Globe reporter. "Why, you can start by buying a newspaper for two cents, and look for the prices of boots and shoes; he fluds a kind which will wear three months, and he only has $i to pay for them. Next he looks for steckings, finds that some large store is having a run on such goods, and that he can get a pair for four or five cents, and warranted to wear well. He buys a pair for each week, and saves a pair or so for accidents; that makes sixty pairs of stockings, at five cents each, $3. He then looks for underwear. He has two sets to get, price $3, and he can get a suit of clothes for $8, and a hat for $1. Collars cost very little, and eighty cents will buy enough to last a long time.
